Wendy's all-you-can-eat Superbar buffet, angled to aid traffic flow.

Wendy's rolls Superbar in new turnaround bid

By Peter J. Romeo

DUBLIN, Ohio — Wendy's, launching its boldest turnaround effort yet, said it would install mini-smorgasbords as a second dining option in most of its 1,120 company restaurants during the next six months.

Wendy's patrons will have a choice of either ordering from the chain's current hamburger-oriented menu or helping themselves to the pastas, Mexican finger foods, salad fixings, and baked potatoes featured on the new Superbar buffet.

Wendy's officials invited all franchisees to install the all-you-can-eat spread as well, at a cost of $30,000 to $40,000 per restaurant. The officers said they have asked Wendy's board of directors to establish a lending fund for licensees needing financial aid for the changeover.

The suffering 3,800-unit franchisor said at the time that it would spend $35 million to outfit company stores with the 18-foot bar.

Court rules against concept copycatting

By Marilyn Alva

SAN FRANCISCO — Restaurateurs, who already operate in a faddish, competitive environment, now have a new legal weapon to protect themselves against copycats.

Because of a landmark U.S. Appeals Court ruling here, restaurants can now seek "trade dress" protection from businesses that imitate their "total visual image" and thus cause customer confusion.

The federal court's trade dress decision stemmed from a suit San Antonio, Texas-based Fuddruckers brought two years ago against Doc's B.R. Others restaurant in Tempe, Ariz., near Phoenix, Ariz., which went out of business earlier this year. It claimed "trade dress" infringement and unfair competition.

The decision is considered a landmark because it extends trademark law to a combination of elements employed in the marketing of restaurant services, according to Paul D. Gutierrez, a trademark attorney here. In the past trade dress protected only product packages and displays.

The ruling, Gutierrez added, "may provide those restaurants known for their distinctive trade dress with a powerful weapon against competitors that try to copy that distinctiveness for their own benefit."

IRS perils writeoff for charity food

By Ken Rankin

WASHINGTON — Restaurateurs who donate excess food to charity received a jolt from federal tax collectors: A new Internal Revenue Service interpretation of last year's "Tax Refcrm" law may jeopardize deductions for such donations.

At the same time IRS officials are also now suggesting that they have authority under the new law to limit tax deductions for meals served to hospital patients.

The controversial legislation passed by Congress last year "capped" federal tax deductions for business meals at 80 percent—a move that attracted vigorous opposition from food-service industry groups.

But according to legal ex-

China Grill debuts at 'Black Rock'

By Ken Frydman

NEW YORK — The China Grill restaurant—an homage to the travels of Marco Polo and the food of Wolfgang Puck—has premiered on the ground floor of "Black Rock," the West 53rd Street headquarters of CBS Inc.

Kenji Seki, Puck's former maître d' at Puck's Chinois on Main restaurant in Santa Monica, brought three Chinois waiters to Manhattan to serve the California-Oriental cuisine at China Grill.

Real-estate investor Jeffrey Chodorow, 37, and his partners spent $1.5 million to create an open and spacious atmosphere of granite walls and pillow-shaped light fixtures hung from 20 feet off the floor.

Pushcart coffee pusher

SAN FRANCISCO — When Heather Healy rolled into the lives of Victor's customers eight years ago, some were less than thrilled by her brewed-to-order table-side coffee service.

"There was a little impatience at the start," she recalled. Healy explained that people, then unaccustomed to being queried about their coffee tastes and advised which of her six blends might suit them best, occasionally complained, "All I want is a cup of coffee."

But such resistance has long since faded. Healy and her pushcart, now loaded with 16 blends of fresh-ground coffee, an assortment of loose-leaf teas, and afterdinner drinks, do $400 to $500 a night in business. She once topped $900 in nightly sales.

Patrons at Victor's, the grand-dining dame atop the Westin St. Francis Hotel here, pay $3.50 or $4.50 for a plunger-filter pot of coffee, which holds two standard cups.

Prosecutors sue to change control of Fulton market

NEW YORK — Charging that restaurants and other customers of the Fulton Fish Market are routinely shaken down by thugs, federal prosecutors have filed a lawsuit seeking to wrest the famed wholesale mart away from alleged Mafia overlords.

The suit requests that a federal court appoint supervisors to oversee both the market and its main union, Local 359 of the United Seafood Workers.

The authorities said the "Genovese crime family" uses its control of the market and its union to gouge and extort from its customers.

AIDS 'gossip' forces Md. restaurant to close

HAGERSTOWN, Md. — "Vicious gossip" about an employee with AIDS has forced the 10-week-old Seija's Place seafood restaurant here to close, its proprietors said.

The rumor, which another employee started, cost the place about $2,000 a week in lost sales, said owners Lawrence and Seija Dolittle. The Dolittles said closing the business would cost them $100,000 but indicated that they saw no alternative.

B-R rolls out yogurt, eyes other 'dessert areas'

GLENDALE, Calif. — Baskin-Robbins, the 2,700-unit ice-cream chain, is rolling out frozen yogurt as part of a diversification into "other dessert areas," said Carol Kirby, vice president of marketing.

Some 200 Baskin-Robbins units have already added yogurt, Kirby said. She did not specify which other desserts the chain is considering but noted that novelty products are "the big news this year" in ice-cream retailing.

KFC eliminates 90 posts in management overhaul

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Kentucky Fried Chicken Corp. said it would eliminate 90 headquarters staff positions by year-end as part of a plan to restructure its management system.

The company also said that 30 staffers in support positions, such as marketing, finance and human resources, would be moved from KFC's headquarters here to new divisional offices throughout the nation "to bring managers in closer contact with day-to-day operations of both franchised and company-owned restaurants."

MTC grants Togo's L.A. rights to Horizon Group

CAMPBELL, Calif. — MTC Management, franchisor of the 100-unit Togo's Eatery sandwich chain, has granted development rights for most of Los Angeles County to The Horizon Group, an entrepreneurial group of former retailers.

MTC president Michael Cobler said Horizon has agreed to open two Togo's during the next two years and then three per year through 1999.

St. Louis alderman seeks restaurant tax exemption

ST. LOUIS — In an attempt to soften the impact of a proposed increase in the local restaurant sales tax, an alderman has introduced a bill exempting dining places from paying city inspection fees.

Alderman James Signaigo said he introduced the exemption bill specifically to help neighborhood restaurants that will not benefit from an expansion of the city's convention center. To fund the project, the municipal government has proposed raising the restaurant sales tax to 1.5 percent from 1 percent.

Index tumbles 13.5

NEW YORK — While overall stock prices plummeted amid panic selling, the Nation's Restaurant News Stock Index tumbled 13.5 points and closed Oct. 16 at 181.8.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average broke several records during the week observers dubbed the "October Massacre." The bellwether index of blue-chip stocks fell 235.47 points in five days to close at 2,246.74. On Oct. 16 the Dow plunged 108.35 points on volume of 338.5 million shares, both records. Analysts said a disappointing trade deficit precipitated the declines, as investors worried about increasing interest rates and a slumping dollar.

IDQ enters new delivery business

MINNEAPOLIS — International Dairy Queen is testing a new home-delivery venture in Charleston, S.C., called Telechef. The service is unrelated to IDQ's Dairy Queen, Orange Julius, and Karmelkorn chains.

The 10 test outlets promise to deliver fried chicken, pizza, and hot hero sandwiches within 30 minutes or the food is free.

Credit cards are accepted for orders of more than $7.50.

IDQ owns 60 percent of the venture, which is slated for an initial six-month test. It would not identify its partner.

Opening of Casey's Katz delayed by lease problem

SEATTLE — The opening of Katz, Northwest cuisine phenomenon Kathy Casey's planned restaurant here, has been delayed indefinitely because of lease problems, she said.

Casey, 26, who gained fame among Northwest foodies during her two-year stint as chef at Fuller's in the Seattle Sheraton, said negotiations for her first choice of sites "fell through" at the last minute.

Nanci Main and Jimella Lucas, co-owners of The Ark Restaurant and Bakery in Nahcotta, Wash., are Casey's partners in the Katz venture.

Brinkman replaces Lomax at helm of Mr. Gatti's

AUSTIN, Texas — Floor-covering magnate L.D. Brinkman has assumed day-to-day control of the Mr. Gatti's 340-unit pizza chain following the resignation of Gary Lomax as president.

Lomax surrendered the post to pursue "personal investment opportunities," the company said. He was president for less than 18 months.

Brinkman, chairman of both Mr. Gatti's and its parent, tile and carpet supplier LD Brinkman Corp., also assumed the presidency when Lomax's predecessor resigned in 1985 after serving only five months.

September restaurant sales bounce back

Gain 6.6% over year-ago level

By Don Jeffrey

WASHINGTON — Sales at eating and drinking places rebounded strongly in September after a sluggish August, according to government data.

The Commerce Department said the nation's bars and restaurants rang up $12.9 billion in sales in September, a 6.6-percent increase over the previous-year figure. Sales gained at a year-to-year rate of 2.6 percent in August and 5.2 percent in July.

The government's advance sales figure, which is not adjusted for inflation or seasonal variations, will be revised twice in the next two months.

Observers saw no discernible trend in the September sales spurt. But the comparison with a slow September last year was fairly easy.

"There may be some pickup in food spending simply because it was so weak early on," said Christopher Caton, an economist with Data Resources in Lexington, Mass.

He noted that overall food consumption, which includes spending in supermarkets, had been "bafflingly low" the first six months this year and that an uptick in restaurant sales might be "the undoing of that process."

But many economists still see weak growth in consumers' real disposable income as the cause of sluggish restaurant sales this year.

Adjusted for seasonal variations, September's sales were 1.1 percent ahead of August's —the biggest month-to-month gain since January.

Total retail sales, meanwhile, fell a seasonally adjusted 0.4 percent from August to September. Unadjusted, overall retail sales were flat compared with those in September 1986.

Chicago owner hires no workers — he rents them

By Carolyn Walkup

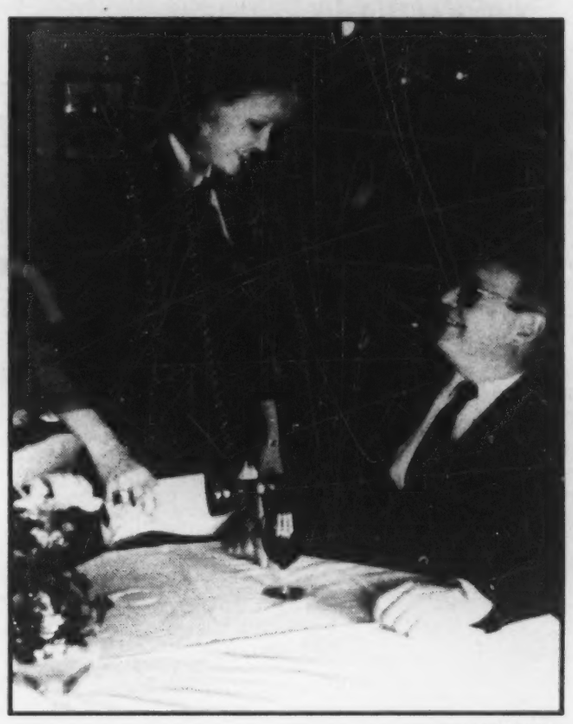
CHICAGO — The Chicago Chop House has almost no employees. Instead of hiring 65 people to run the restaurant, owner Henry Norton leases them from an agency.

Advantages of this system are endless, according to Norton, who previously owned other restaurants and resorts at which he employed his own staff. The leasing agency does all the paperwork involved with scheduling, keeping a payroll, computing withholding taxes, handling insurance claims, and countless other details.

Interviewing, checking references, complying with the new immigration law, training, drug and psychological testing, and other personnel matters also are out of Norton's hands, freeing him and his three managers and bookkeeper to concentrate on tasks they enjoy.

Those managers are the executive chef, director of operations, and director of administration. Norton believes those key positions need to be filled by his own employees.

Instead of spending hours in writing paychecks and performing related tedious chores, Norton's bookkeeper now has time for such income producing jobs as writing letters to solicit bookings of private parties. "The party business is very profitable," said Norton, noting that his direct mail campaign is paying off.



NRN Photo

Owner Henry Norton is served by leased employee Joanne Kraner.

Since the staff members are not the restaurant's employees, Norton and his managers do not get involved in their personal problems, as is often the case in employer-employee relationships. When an employee doesn't show up for work, for instance, Norton simply calls the agency for an immediate substitute.

Norton reports any dissatisfaction with workers in writing to the agency. "If they get enough report forms, they will replace the employee," he said.

Likewise, Norton and the agency collaborate on decisions regarding raises and promotions. If employees are dissatisfied, they have opportunities to be placed at other restaurants the agency works with.

Other advantages to employees are a better benefits package than an individual restaurant operator could provide, owing to a larger employee pool. Through offering better benefits and advancement opportunities, Becky Outlaw, president of Heatherton Staff Leasing, the agency Norton uses, hopes to attract more career-oriented people to the restaurant field.

Heatherton currently leases employees to eight restaurants and is negotiating contracts with about 20 more. The Chicago Chop House was Heatherton's first restaurant client.

"I think it's a practice that will spread," commented Ron Paul, president of Technomics Consultants. Leasing employees makes sense for restaurants that employ many part-time workers and are too small to provide comprehensive benefit programs, he said.

IRS limits charity deductions

perts at the Washington, D.C.-based Foodservice & Lodging Institute, the latest IRS interpretation of that law goes well beyond the intent of Congress to disallow deductions for 20 percent of the cost of business entertainment meals.

"The service has recently indicated that the 20-percent limitation on the deduction for food and beverages can be applied to limit the deduction taken for a portion of hospital medical expenses attributable to food served to hospital patients and to any charitable contributions of food or beverages," FLI attorney Tracy Power told the group's members.

"Such an interpretation, although supported by the actual statutory language, clearly goes beyond Congress' stated purpose of limiting abusive business entertainment deductions," she said.

It is significant IRS officials have indicated they do not intend at this time to issue an enforcement policy subjecting either hospital patient meals or charitable food donations to the 80-percent deduction ceiling. But according to Power, the agency "believes it clearly has the authority to limit such deductions."

Ironically, she concluded, "It may, therefore, be less costly to let your surplus food rot than to donate it to the hungry."

For more than a year now, officials at the FLI have been warning food-service industry executives that the 1986 Tax Reform bill provision capping business meal deductions at 80 percent was "dangerously misleading," and that "the actual statutory language [of the bill] was capable of much broader application."

Fortunately, Power said, "we avoided the adverse effect on the restaurant industry of such far-reaching interpretations of the actual statutory language likely to be asserted by Treasury, by convincing Congress that an overzealous revenue agent applying the code literally would deny a deduction for 20 percent of the cost of providing food and beverages to employees of food-service operations, and that clarifying language was necessary."

Nevertheless, the FLI continued to warn restaurateurs that the IRS may interpret the law more broadly than Congress had intended.

"Some [FLI] members may recall that our analysis was criticized in the trade press as exaggerating the potential applications of the law," Power said.

But in view of the new IRS interpretation regarding charitable food contributions and hospital meals, "we apparently did not stretch the possible interpretations far enough," she maintained.

IRS rule makers confirmed the FLI report that the tax service does indeed interpret the new 80-percent deduction ceiling to apply to both charitable food donations and hospital meals.

"Unofficially," however, one IRS official said the agency is unlikely to issue formal rules to disallow such deductions.

"We always try to be reasonable," he told NRN, adding that the IRS does not adopt "absurd" interpretations of the tax code.

No consensus on wage hike's effect on menu prices

NEW YORK — An informal survey of Wall Street analysts and restaurant companies' financial officers reveals disagreeement over whether chains will be forced to raise menu prices to cover higher costs from an anticipated hike in the federal minimum hourly wage.

Some members of the financial community say the new wage standard will not greatly affect chains because most employees are already being paid above the proposed minimum. In a time of low unemployment, many companies have been forced to raise wages to attract workers.

And some observers are wary of menu-price increases while chains' customer counts are flat or declining.

"It's definitely going to have an effect on our operations," said Robert Lamp, chief financial officer of Consul Corp., the 35-unit Chi-Chi's franchisee in Minneapolis. "Our costs will go up, and it will put some pressure on pricing."

"We may have to alter pricing accordingly," said Doug Dawson, chief financial officer of Domino's Pizza, whose home-delivery drivers are hired at the minimum wage.

But Lewis ("Bucky") Kilbourne, chief financial officer of Brock Hotel Corp., said, "We don't contemplate at this point in time to increase menu prices as a result of wage increases." He said that "careful labor scheduling" could keep payroll costs in line.

Congress will be considering a bill that would raise the national minimum hourly wage to $3.85 next year, $4.25 in 1989, and $4.65 in 1990. It has been at $3.35 since 1981. At least three states are also weighing increases in the base wage for workers.

Most industry observers say a higher minimum wage is a certainty, but they disagree over the possible impact on profitability and the wisdom of raising menu prices.

Ward P. Lindenmayer, analyst with Sutro & Co. in San Francisco, said that although the new wage standards would create "some margin pressure," he did not believe chains would pass on the increased costs in higher prices.

"Everyone agrees you can pass it through to the customers, but I don't buy it because restaurant traffic is sloppy," Lindenmayer said. "There's still a lot of restaurants chasing customers. What they may do is take it out of the employees in other forms—use fewer employees or cut their benefits. They won't do it on margins."

"I don't see it as being a tremendously significant event," said Bryan C. Elliott, analyst with Robinson- Humphrey Co. in Atlanta. A tight labor market in many parts of the country has already pushed up wage rates, he added.

Calling Atlanta a "horrible labor market," Elliott said, "Hamburger flippers are getting five or six dollars an hour here for a day's work."

He estimated the new wage standard might force prices up by 1.5 percent to 3 percent, "assuming customer counts hold."

Kilbourne said that because Brock paid "very few" of its employees the minimum wage, he did not expect the new law to have any impact for at least 12 to 18 months. "But over time," he added, "you may have to adjust employees' wages upward because of the new standards."

Jerry P. Melin, analyst with Drexel Burnham and Lambert in New York, said the new law would have "more of an impact on fast-food chains" than on family restaurants, which "tend to try to foster good employee relations" by offering higher wages.

Restaurant chain executives have been urged to lobby congressmen to reject the minimum-wage bill, but many observers say the industry's efforts have not been strong enough.

Recently the National Restaurant Association and other U.S. business groups launched a Mailgram campaign designed to urge President Reagan to "unequivocally oppose a minimum-wage increase."

Analysts tout Perkins; investors wary

The stock of Perkins Family Restaurants L.P. has not been performing according to its potential, some analysts say, possibly because big investors may be wary of risks associated with limited partnerships.

Congress is cautious, too, but for a different reason: Partnerships, unlike corporations, are not taxed. Lawmakers may end that, though.

But analyst Ward P. Lindenmayer of Sutro & Co. in San Francisco does not think Perkins will suffer if Congress decides to levy taxes on partnerships. He believes the company will simply change back into a corporation and perhaps fare better in the long run because of increased visibility to institutional investors.

Perkins offered partnership interests to the public at $13 a unit, but the price has fallen to $10.25. Lindenmayer termed the stock's sluggishness a "source of mystery" and said it might be due to "a large amount of confusion, uncertainty, and misunderstanding surrounding the entire M.L.P. field.

But he added that "the potential of Perkins has only begun to be tapped."

The company's annual distribution of $1.20 a unit to holders equals a 10.8-percent yield, higher than on Treasury bonds, for example. And 40 percent of that distribution is tax sheltered.

Operationally, Perkins is in good shape. An experienced management team led by ex-burger chain executive Don Smith has been able to boost same-store sales an estimated 8.2 percent this year. A large stake in equity by management—about 18 percent of outstanding units—ensures attention to details.

Perkins' recent acquisition of four franchised units in Florida is expected to add $560,000 a year to cash flow. The company is likely to continue buying franchised units. The chain now stands at 109 company stores and 222 franchised.

In addition, Perkins' new bakery concept, now operating at about break-even, according to Melin, should add an estimated $200,000 in annual sales to each restaurant.

Price of success: Bryan C. Elliott of Robinson-Humphrey Co. in Atlanta has lowered the rating of Cracker Barrel (recent price: $18.50) in the short term from buy to hold, because of "its strong performance and its relative price-earnings multiple expansion."

But, in the long term, he advises investors to buy shares in the chain of family restaurants and gift shops located along Southeastern interstate highways.

The strong performance he noted includes these results for the year ended July 31: real same-store sales up 6.3 percent; operating margins, 17.3 percent, from 15.2 percent; net profit, 30.2 percent.

NRN FINANCIAL DIGEST

Marriott hotels pace quarterly gains

WASHINGTON — Marriott Corp. reported gains in its lodging, contract-feeding, and restaurant divisions boosted net profit in the third quarter, ended Sept. 11, 15 percent, to $56.7 million. Revenue climbed 16 percent, to $1.49 billion.

Lodging showed the biggest increases, with operating profit up 23 percent, and sales up 18 percent. The company attributed the gains to the addition of 12 Marriott hotels and 50 Courtyard hotels in the past year. Marriott operates 340 hotels.

Restaurants posted the smallest rise in operating profit, 8 percent, on a 15-percent sales gain. The company said Big Boy family restaurants earned higher profits because of "new merchandising programs, remodeling of older units, and contributions from converted Howard Johnson's units."

Contract feeding reported a 10-percent operating profit increase on a 14-percent sales gain. Marriott said it reduced administrative costs following the integration of Saga's food-service operations.

Consul reports big profit rise

MINNEAPOLIS — Consul Corp., the 35-unit Chi-Chi's franchisee, reported a 364-percent increase in net profit in the first quarter, ended Aug. 31, to $701,000. Revenue was flat, at $19.6 million.

Robert Lamp, chief financial officer, attributed the big jump in earnings to a 13-percent increase in unit level profit and a 42-percent reduction in interest expense that resulted from a debentures-for-stock exchange.

Lamp said Consul opened its second Chi-Chi's El Pronto express unit in late August.

Heidi's forms venture in Japan

LAGUNA HILLS, Calif. — Heidi's Frozen Yogurt Shoppes Inc. said it had agreed in principle with Tokyo-based Nissin Sugar Manufacturing Co. Ltd. to form a joint venture to develop up to 350 units in the next three years in Japan.

Nissin, besides refining sugar, operates sports and fitness centers, markets health products, and consults for the health and leisure industries.

Heidi's is a chain of 69 yogurt parlors.

Fuddruckers issues stock rights

SAN ANTONIO, Texas — Fuddruckers Inc., trying to repay debt and boost working capital, said it would issue to shareholders of record nearly 4.4 million rights to purchase shares of common stock.

The company said it would issue for each two shares held one transferrable right to purchase one share of common stock for $1.60. Rights were set to expire on Oct. 21. Fuddruckers said Hallwood Securities International agreed to purchase all shares offered.
